Since ancient times, rabbits have been considered a symbol of happiness due to their short front legs, long, large hind legs, and ability to climb hills quickly, which means things move smoothly. Their long ears attract good fortune, and their prolific offspring bring fertility.

These rabbit themed chopsticks and chopstick rests are housed in a special paulownia wood box. Considered messengers of the moon, why not bring good fortune with these rabbit chopsticks and chopstick rests?

[Text on the middle board]

Since ancient times, rabbits have been considered messengers of the moon and prized as auspicious animals that "bring good fortune." Their long ears are said to attract good fortune, and their hopping pose is a symbol of proactive action and leaps. Furthermore, the character "neru" (to avoid) originates from "rabbit," which means "to avoid," and they are believed to have the power to ward off bad luck and misfortune.
